THE LOVER FAILED TO COME.

Miss Hart Waited All Day to Be Married but Was Disappointed.

Mamie Hart, a pretty sixteen-year-old country maiden from Houston, Ohio, arrived in the city yesterday morning about 11 o'clock, expecting to meet at the Union Station the young man to whom she is engaged. For seven hours she paced to and fro near the big gate, looking for her expected lover, but at 6 o'clock he had failed to appear, so she hunted up police headquarters, and there told her story to Police Matron Buchanan, who cared for her dur-

The name of the young man who promised to meet the girl is given as George Garrett, of Columbus, this State. Several months ago he visited Houston, and there met and won Miss Hart. The young couple were engaged to be married. Miss Hart's parents offered no objection. Garrett for-warded her the money for car fare to this city, where it was intended to have the performed. The arrangement was that they were to meet near the gate between 11 and 12 o'clock. Miss Hart ar-rived in good time and anxiously awaited the appearance of Garrett. Time passed and she did not lose her faith in his word. Toward evening she became weary and very anxious, and walked nervously before the gate. She had no money and could not return home. At police headquarters it is believed that Garrett was honest in his intentions, but was probably prevented from the engagement by some accident. Miss Hart expects to hear from him to-lay, for the Columbus authorities were noday, for the Columbus authorized asked to inform Garrett of the circumstances of the

DYNAMITE ON THE TRACK.

Possible Attempt to Blow Up a Train on the Belt Road.

Some workmen found several supposed sticks of dynamite near the Belt railroad, between the stock yards and the J., M. & I. tracks, which gave rise to the report that an attempt had been made to blow up the Belt road. There were thirteen sticks buried in the ground with a half burned fuse attached. The stuff has been in the ground or several weeks and it is wondered why he persons who placed it there did not remove it or start another fuse, if damage were intended. It had not been definitely settled yesterday that the stuff was dynamite, but it appears to be, and detectives have been set to work upon the case.

HOME MILITIA GONE

YESTERDAY.

Greeted by Great Crowds Mong the Line of March to the Station -Closing Scenes.

The Indiana National Guard vacated its quarters at Fairview at 12:30 o'clock yesterday. One of the most successful military encampments ever held in the State is over. The soldiers have gone, and with them went the good-will and respect of those who visited the camp last week.

At 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning a cannon shot awoke the echoes of the camp. It was the final signal for breaking up quarters, and at the sound of the gun the white city faded away as if by magic. With one pull at the ropes each tent came down, and men were soon busy rolling up the canvas and stowing it away. Everything was carried to the tent of the quartermaster and carefully deposited there. Within an hour after the signal was given each regiment was ready to move. At 11 o'clock the last mess was enjoyed, and the next hour was spent in packing up the cooking utensils. At 12:30 o'clock a trumpeter at brigade headquarters sounded the call for the formation of the regiments on the parade ground, and fifteen minutes before 1 o'clock the march to the city began. General Mc-Kee and staff advanced at the head of the column, on horseback. An ambulance prought up the rear. The brigade moved toward the city on Illinois street until Twenty-sixth street was reached, and then swung over to Meridian. Along Meridian street it came to Seventh, and then marched east to Delaware street, entering the city over that thoroughfare. The seven miles' march occupled three hours and fifteen minutes. The men walked slowly, and carried their arms in the most comfortable positions. The sun shone hot most of the way, but there was a good breeze, and the troops stood the march remarkably well. A half hour was occupied in resting along the tain Clark said no.

and some of those who had suffered from illness during the week were permitted to take the street cars. At the Statehouse ephone messages were received every few minutes during the march announcing the position of the troops, and Governor Matthews kept himself informed as to the precise location of the advancing column, Thousands of people gathered along Capi-tol avenue in front of the Statehouse and scrambled for positions on the stone wall. Washington street was thronged on both sides, and Illinois street, from Washington to the Union Station, was crowded.
The first glimpse of the soldiers was had by the people congregated at the Statehouse when they turned off Ohio street on to Capitol avenue. General McKee and staff rode slowly at the head of the column. They were followed by the First, Fourth, Third and Second regiments and the First Artillery. Governor Matthews and the State officials, with their friends, stood on the broad stone steps at the east entrance of the Capitol building. As the brigade general and staff approached they acknowledged the presence of the group on the steps by lifting their plumed hel-mets. The First Regiment band played a national air, the crowd that lined the fence cheered and the ladies of the Governor's family waved their handkerchiefs. Many of the troops showed the marks of a hard march as they passed, but they came with firm step and heads erect. Some were dusty and unshaved and looked as if they had been on a long campaign, but they were strong-limbed and had the bearing of

The troops left Capitol avenue at Washington street and marched east, part to Meridian and part to Illinois street. They marched into the sheds at the station through the east and west entrances. It was but a few minutes after 4 o'clock when the regiments reached the station. General McKee and part of his brigade left the troops at Meridian and Georgia streets, and the Second Regiment was pretty well thinned out by the time it reached the station. Five companies of the Second belong in Indianapolis, and the local troops took their leave of the regiment at Illionis For two hours and a half yesterday evening the troops had absolute possession of the Union Station. The regular passen-ger traffic was almost neglected by the officials in their efforts to get the soldiers out of the way. Hundreds of people swarmed in the depot lobbies and congregated in the sheds. The gatemen tried to keep the crowd back and refused to let anybody through the gates who did not have a pass or a ticket. Then people began pouring into the sheds from the east and west ends. Policemen were kept busy keeping the tracks clear, and it is a wonder that somebody was not badly hurt. Militiamen hur-ried here and there seeking their respect-ive trains, and Superintendent Zion, of the Union Railway Company, walked about and answered questions like a clerk at an nformation bureau. Adjutant-general Robbins had the schedule of the departure of the special trains and nearly went distract-ed trying to locate the different companies as they marched into the sheds.

It seemed as if the entire feminine population of the city had turned out to see the troops off. Pretty and well-dressed girls rushed hither and thither in an eager search for some gay lieutenant or captain who had whispered into their willing ears during the week. Anxious maidens pressed eves ached. Gushing girls in shirt waists clung to soldierly figures and chatted and chewed gunf and some grew bold enough to kiss their admirers good-bye. There were screams of laughter and sighs and heartaches. The Union Station never saw such sights before. The first train to leave was a Vandalla special at 5 o'clock, bearing the First Regiment to the southern part of the State. Another train departed at 5:20, and another at 6 o'clock. By 7 o'clock the last regiment had gone, and regular traf-fic was once more resumed at the station.

CAMP IN A STORM.

Withstood the Elements-A Lieutenant May Be Dismissed. The camp at Fairview did not suffer materially from the rain and windstorm that came up early yesterday morning. The tents were proof against the rainfall, and those who were able to sleep through the storm suffered no inconvenience. About 3 o'clock the wind was terrific and many feared that the camp would be blown away. Trees cracked and groaned, and the tents stretched and tugged at their moorings. A short time before the storm came up the Third Regiment responded to the long-roll. Every man was found to be in his quarters and the battalions got into a line of battle in six minutes after the first tap of the drum. The men had just time to get back reconciliation of the parties. A statement | to bed and to sleep when the storm came. The camp was astir early yesterday morning and the usual routine was carried out until 9:30 o'clock, when the signal to break camp was sounded. A feature of the norning was the announcement to the regiments of the results of the general courts-martial held Thursday and Friday ights. In the case of the lieutenant of the Third Regiment, who, with a sergeant, visited the Bellevue resort with two women, the finding was not made known. General McKee will refer his verdict to the Governor for the executive approval. Members of the regiment think the lieutenant will be dismissed from the service. The sergeant who accompanied the lieutenant across the lines was fined two days' pay and received a severe reprimand. The sorgeant of Company I, First Regiment, who was charged with masquerading in citizen's attire was acquitted. Several of his comrades testified that he was in his quarters at the time he was thought to be sneaking from the camp in a pair of duck trousers and mackintosh.

THESE INDIANS ARE GOOD.

Old Soldier's Story of His First Experience in the Sloux Country. "I was about the age of that young fellow when I got my first experience of the frontier." said the handsome, gray-haired army officer as he sat smoking in front of his tent at the camp of instruction yesterday morning. The gold letters "U. S. A." on the collar of his navy-blue jacket indicated that he was yet in the service of the American government. The buoyant figure of a young lieutenant, who had just passed, called forth the remark and set him to talking.

of me the first night I joined my company," continued the army officer. "It was in the ant's commission, started west to join my company at Glendive, Mont. Part the regiment was at Keough, one hundred and thirty miles from Glendive. I reached the latter place about 5 o'clock in the evening. Everything was rosy/to me for I was just getting my first glimpse of the frontier army. Keough was reached by a long steamboat ride on the Yellowstone river and I jumped of the hoat a very proud young man. A lieutenant named Johnson, who had been in the service for years, took me to his quarters and spend the next three hours telling me some things I didn't know. About 8 o'clock Johnson excused himself and instructed me to make myself at home. I did so by going to bed, ut was awakened an hour later by a grayaired old sergeant who informed me that Captain Clark wished to see me. I had met no one in the regiment except Johnson, but followed the sorgeant to Captain Clark's quarters. There I found eight or ten officers engaged in a game of poker. Johnson was in the crowd but d'dn't know me, apparently. I asked for taptain Clark and a brusque, sharp-eyed fellow turned from the table and looked at me. "'Plebe, can you mix a cocktail?" was his first query. I thought this rather a peculiar introduction out replied:
"'Yes, sir, I think I can."

"'Can you drink a cocktail, I'lele?" answered him satisfactorily and he pointed see what you can do, was his next com-mand. I did the work pretty fairly, I think, and received a rude slap on the back as myereward. I thought I would sit down and make the best of it, but Cap-" 'You don't sit down, Piebe, you stan At Seventh street a brief stop was made up and wait on the gentlemen, he coolly remarked as I sought a chair. I stood up the rest of the night but boiled inwardly and tried hard to keep up a good front beo'clock next morning I was bundled off to Glendive with an old sergeant, a nult team and a driver. At Glendive I found my company and things moved smoothly for a month. One morning Lieuterant Bowen suggested that we go out about ten miles from the fort and shoot buffaio. was pleased with the idea and we started with three or four Chevenne Indian scouts. Across the river the Sionx Indians vere being held in check by the agent of the reservation, but nobody could tell when they would break out. We rode through their country, but saw no Indians until we got seven or eight miles from the fort. There our Cheyenne scouts located something way out on the prairie. We got up onto a little knoll and Bowen swept the country with

By George they are Indians,' he exclaimed, and our Cheyenne scouts, with a cry of 'Sioux,' jumped onto their ponies and lit out for the fort. There we were alone with a couple of Springfield rifles that were practically unfit for warfare. The Indians were coming at a gallop-fifty or more of them. "'Come on,' yelled Bowen, springing into his saddle, and then we started. I looked back just once and could see the Indians beating their ponies and waving their arms. We got within a few miles of the fort, and Bowen suggested that we throw away our heavy rifles. We knew that they would to us no good with that crowd of savages and we flung them aside. This lightened the load our horses had to bear, and we did pretty well for a mile or two. Pretty soon I heard Bowen call out:

"'Look out for the quicksand,' and saw his horse make a flying leap across a narrow stream. I wondered if I would be able to do it, and a ringing, savage cry of tri-umph six hundred yards back of me impelled me to try it. My horse reached the bank and squared himself for the leap, but the soft soil gave way and we—my horse and I—landed in the quicksand. It was deep and the horse floundered about, and finally sank until the sand was way up above the stirrups. I will candidly confess that I was as nearly scared to death as a man could be. Bowen saw that I did not make the jump and dashed back to tell me that he would ride on after a detachment of mounted infantry. I could hear the Indians coming, and their yells fairly raised the hair on my head. I raised up in the saddle and looked back, and those Indians looked as big as mountains to me. I never had seen an Indian on the warpath before, but I had heard them talking at the fort about the flendish acts that an Indian could commit. I remembered that my colonel said it was better to kill yourself than be taken alive by them. I debated this in my mind, and while I was reaching a decision three or four leering, painted faces popped up above the bank. The moment they saw my plight they began to dance and slap their legs and laugh. Something tickled them immensely, but I wasn't appreciating the joke. Then they came down the bank and coolly pulled me from the horse, helped the animal out of the sand and put me back in the saddle. The biggest Indian in the party, named Little-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horse, drew a paper from his pocket and indicated by signs that I should read it.

t was a note from the agent of the reserva-"'These Indians have a permit to hunt buffalo on this reservation. They are peaceable, and are not to be molested. As finished reading the note I heard the incoming a short distance away. Bowen had given the alarm, and they had been ordered out to rescue me from the Indians. I met Bowen somewhat sheepishly, and suggested that the story needn't be told at the fort. It never was."

COL. E. J. M'BRIDE DEAD.

He Was Supreme Treasurer of the K and L. of Honor.

Colonel E. J. McBride, formerly of this city, died yesterday at his home in Corvdon, after an illness with heart and kidney trouble. He was supreme treasurer of the Knights and Ladies of Honor at the time of the failure of the Bank of Commerce, in 1893, when he, as treasurer of the order, had so large a deposit in the bank. The litigation growing out of that claim was recently settled in court and the building was sold by the sheriff to satisfy the claim. Colonel McBride was for many years a supreme official in the order. He was sixty-seven years old. He was also prominent in G. A. R. circles, having been one of the delegates to the encampment held here two years ago.

Buckner and Wallace Charged with A POSSIBLE CLEW TO THE MURDER-ER OF IDA GEBHARD.

> The Citizens of West Indianapolis Will Turn Out To-Day to Search for the Place of the Tragedy.

George Gebhard, father of Ida Gebhard, the child that was butchered in West Indianapolis, arrived from Michigan last evening, returning directly from the burial of the child, Mr. Gebhard will remain here and do everything possible to aid in the search for the inhuman murderer of his child. His return to the suburb puts at rest some foolish rumors which have been in circulation. Mr. Gebhard returns with certificates showing that little Ida was his child, and that he is a man of excellent Ida disappeared from her home and one 10c grade White Goods, Plaids and week next Tuesday since her mutilated body was found in a stable on River avenue. During all this time a vigorous search has been carried on, but the disappearance of the child and her death remain as mysterious as ever. Yesterday some boys playing in the neighborhood of the grain elevator between the Big Four and Vandalla tracks, about one-half mile from the Gebhard home, found a pair of badly soiled trousers supposed to be covered with blood. It was the opinion of those who saw the trousers that blood was the material which stained them. They were turned over to the coroner and an investigation will be made. Should it develop that the trousers are covered with human blood they may lead to the discovery of the owner, who, perhaps, was the murderer of the child. J. R. Linson, the man held at the worklouse as knowing something of the murder, was some better yesterday, but could not talk intelligently. It has been found necessary to keep him under the effects of morphine most of the time, for when he is not under the influence of the drug he be-

Detective Ben Thornton located a sister of Gebhard's yesterday, who is a domestic at No. 937 North Meridian street. She says her brother has no enemies in his

To-day may develop something, as the cople of West Indianapolis are going to institute a vigorous search for some traces of the piace where the child was murdered. It is a common theory that she was not killed where found, and there must be some indications of blood where she was murdered. The indications are that the body was placed in the stable by some one who knew the situation and knew that the place was vacant. There are also in-dications that an effort was made by the murderer to cover his tracks. The indications have pointed to the crime being committed by some one of the neighborhood and in justice to themselves a number of citizens have asked that their premises be searched thoroughly. Rumors are flying thick, and it might be added that one of the most respectable residents of the neighborhood was mentioned once, but he demanded an immediate investigation. Others have the same opinions and an investigation might silence some of the rumors, if nothing else.
